Coins of Baramati: A Maratha or Mughal Mint?

By Mohit Kapoor

Obverse

Reverse

Baramati, a historical town in Maharashtra, is situated on the banks of the river Karha. Shejwalkar & Grant Duff provide authentic and credible historical references of Baramati's history in their books. Baramati was ruled by the Yadavas of Devgiri, but later on, after the fall of the Yadava rule, it was merged with the reign of Bahamanis of Gulbarga.

According to Duff, Nizam Shah of Ahmednagar, gifted Baramati to Malojiraje Bhonsale (the grandfather of Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj), in AD 1603. Thus Baramati was ruled by Bhonsale and later on it was included in the reign of Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj.

On 3rd March 1660, Mughals under the leadership of Shahiste Khan crossed the boundary into Shivaji's region and camped at Sonavdi village. From here he proceeded to Baramati, where he reached on 5th April 1660. He captured the fortress of Baramati and also won the Indapur region.

In 1670, the Marathas fought a fierce battle with the Mughal forces at Sinhadgad. After the battle, nearly 1500 Mughal infantry fled to Pune from Sinhadgad. This significantly boosted the confidence of Marathas and within two months the Marathas captured all nearby forts like Purandar, Lohagad and so on excluding Pune, Indapur and Baramati. In June 1670, the Mughal army was totally unprepared and ill-equipped due to the arrival of the monsoons. Then Chatrapati Shivaji Maharaj decided to attack the urban areas of Pune, Baramati, Supe & Indapur and captured them from the Mughals.

Around 1680, total 34 Subas were incorporated in Swarajya which included Supe Baramati.

During the rule of Chatrapati Shivaji Maharaj, Supe Pargana was divided into 3 Tarf namely Supe, Baramati and Saswad.

A letter dated 1723, sent by Chatrapati Shahu Maharaj to Naro Keshav and Baburao Ramaji Deshpande, states that Baramati was called as 'Pargana Supe-Baramati' Sarkar Junnar of Sube Khujaste Buniyad. In due course of time Sarkar Junnar was cancelled and Pargana Supe-Baramati was called initially as Pargana Supe and then as 'Prant Supe'

Coinage of Baramati

Coins struck in the names of Shah Alam Bahadur, Farrukhsiyar and Muhammad Shah are the only specimens known to be struck from the Baramati Mint. Maheshwari and Wiggins have attributed these coins to the Maratha rule in their book Maratha Mints and Coinage.

However, collectors of Maratha coinage have forever debated on the attribution of coins of Shah Alam Bahadur and Farrukhsiyar to the Maratha Rule. Some numismatists suggest that only coins struck in the name of Muhammad Shah can be correctly assigned to the Maratha coinage.

However, I would attribute coins of all three rulers to the Marathas. The basis of my inference lies on some facts that I have found while researching data: Baramati was first captured by the Mughal ruler Aurangzeb, from the Marathas, then why are there no known coins struck by the Mughals in Aurangzeb's name from the Baramati Mint? As a matter of fact, there is no mention of a mint being operational at Baramati prior to Aurangzeb's conquest over Baramati or till the death of Aurangzeb in 1707.

The Marathas had gained a complete control of Baramati by 1670 and the initial coins known to be struck from the Baramati mint are in the name of Shah Alam Bahadur.

The reason for cessation of coins from the Baramati Mint after Muhammad Shah could be since Shahuji had amalgamated Baramati into a larger administration namely Prant Supe around 1728.

There is a question why was the Baramati Mint commissioned during the reign of Shah Alam Bahadur if the coinage is supposedly of the Mughals? Baramati along with the nearby areas was under the control of Marathas and this is a clear indication that coins struck at the Baramati Mint should be attributed to the Marathas.

If scholars think otherwise, then all of the coins struck from the Baramati Mint should be attributed to the Mughals including those struck in the name of Muhammad Shah.
